AFUA BRUCE

COMPUTER ENGINEER

Growing up, Afua Bruce's parents often told her and her sisters to study hard and see what they could do to help other people. She soon realized that she could use her passion for technology to change the world for the better. It all started with a simple database to help a local nonprofit organization stay on top of their goals. Nowadays, Afua thinks of tech as her superpower. With computer engineering, she assists organizations that keep children out of jail, help low-income families access benefits, and ensure all kids have safe homes. She's even worked with the White House.
